A MAN cured of CALF-STEALING, by a BEAR.

JAMES Whitney, of Stevenage, in Hertfordshire, was by trade a butcher, but soon after he had served his apprenticeship, took to buying cattle, and selling them again in markets; but being a profligate fellow, he soon took to thieving, and became as notorious a robber as the age produced. Coming into Essex with a brother of the trade, as loose a fellow as himself, to buy calves, there was one calf that he had particular fancy to, but the owner insisted upon an extraordinary price for it, and they did not agree; upon which says Whitney to his comrade, why should we be so much out of pocket, which at present is something short of us, when perhaps we may get the calf for nothing at night? his comrade approved of the project, so they sat drinking Romford till it was time to put the project in execution; but an unlucky accident prevented their design.

The man who owned the calf kept a public house out of town, and a fellow came to the house in the evening with a bear, which he made a show of up and down the county, and putting into this man's house to lodge, and being at a loss for some place to put up his bear, the maid contrived that she would put up the calf in part of a spare stable, and put the bear in the stall where the calf stood. Accordingly the bear was put there, and in the middle of the night, Whitney and his comrade went to steal the calf: getting into the stall with as little noise as possible, and groping in the dark for the calf, got hold of the bear, and tickling it to make it rise, disturbed it, and rising up on her hind legs, got Whitney in her fore paws, and gave him a fraternal squeeze. The other butcher being out upon the scout, wondered that Whitney did not come away with the calf.

At length being tired with expectation, with a low voice he said to him, What's the matter, will you be all night getting a calf? A calf, says Whitney, I believe I have got the devil here, for he hugs me as close as he did the witch. Says the other butcher again, Pristhee bring him away if you have found him. I can't, says Whitney. Says his companion, then come away yourself. But, says Whitney, he won't let me. Upon this, his comrade goes in, and finding how the matter was, got him released. The bear being very tired, had done him no great harm, but being got out of her clutches, he forswore ever going a calf-stealing again; and from that time was as good as his word.

The FEMALE SLEEP WALKER.

A YOUNG gentleman going down from London into the west of England, to the house of a very worthy gentleman, to whom he had the honour to be related. it fell out that the gentleman's house at that time happened to be full, by reason of a kinswoman's wedding that had been lately kept there, he told the young gentleman that he was very glad to see him, and that he was very welcome to him; but, said he, I know not how I shall do for a lodging for you; for my cousin's marriage has not left a room free but one, and that is haunted: you shall have a very good bed, and all other accommodations. Sir, replied the young gentleman, you shall very much oblige me, in letting me lie there, for I have often coveted to be in a place that was haunted.

The gentleman, very glad that his kinsman was so well pleased with his accommodations, ordered the chamber to be got ready, and a good fire to be made in it, it being winter. When bed-time came, the young gentleman was conducted up into his chamber, which, besides a good fire, was furnished with all suitable accommodations; and having recommended himself to divine protection, he went to bed, where having laid some time awake, and finding no disturbance, he fell asleep; out of which he was awakened, about three o'clock in the morning, by the opening of the chamber-door, and the coming in of some person by appearance a young woman, having a night dress on her head, and only her knock on; but he had no perfect view of her, for his candle was gone out. And though there was a fire in the room, yet it gave not sufficient light to see her distinctly.

But this unknown visitant going to the chimney, took the poker, and stirred up the fire, by the flaming light whereof he could discern the appearance of a young woman more distinctly; but whether it was flesh and blood, or an airy phantom, he knew not.

This lovely appearance having stood some time before the fire, as if to warm her, at last walked two or three times about the room, and then came to the bed side, where having stood a little while, she took up the bed cloaths, and went into bed, pulling the bed-cloaths upon her again, and lay very quietly.

The young gentleman was a little startled at this unknown bed fellow, and upon her approach lay on the further side of the bed, not knowing whether he had best rise or not. At last, laying very still, he perceived his bedfellow to breathe, by which guessing her to be flesh and blood, he drew nearer to her, and taking her by the hand, found it warm, and that it was no airy phantom, but substantial flesh and blood; and finding she had a ring on her finger, he took it off unperceived; the gentlewoman being all this time asleep. he let her lie without disturbing her, or doing any thing else, than only laying his hand upon her, to distinguish of what sex she was; which he had but just time to do, before she flung off the bed-cloathes again, and getting up, walked three or four times about the room, as she had done before; and then standing a while before the door, opened it, went out, and shut it after her.

The young gentleman perceiving by this, in what manner the room was haunted, rose up and locked the door on the inside, and then lay down, and slept till morning; at which time the master of the house came to know how he did, and whether he had seen any thing or not?

He told him there was an apparition appeared unto him, but begged the favour of him that he would not urge him to say any thing further, till the whole family was called together.

The gentleman complied with his request, telling him, as long as he was well, he was very well satisfied. The desire the whole family had to know the issue of this affair, made them dress with more expedition than usual, so that there was a general assembly of the gentlemen and ladies before eleven o'clock, not one of them being willing to appear in her dishabille.

When they were all got together in the great hall, the young gentleman told them that he had one favour to desire of the ladies before he could say any thing, and that was to know, Whether any of them had lost a ring?

The young gentlewoman from whose finger it was taken having missed it all the morning, and not knowing how she had lost it, was glad to hear of it again, and readily owned she wanted a ring, but whether lost or mislaid, she knew not.

The young gentleman asked her if that was it, giving it into her hand, which she acknowledged to be hers, and thanking him, he turned to his kinsman the master of the house; "Now, Sir, I can assure you," said he, taking the gentlewoman by the hand, "this is the lovely spirit by whom your chamber is haunted." And thereupon repeated as above.

But I want words to express the confusion the young gentlewoman was in at the relation, who declared herself perfectly ignorant of all that he said; but believed it might be so, because of the ring, which she perfectly well remembered she had on when she went to bed, and knew not how she had lost it.

This relation gave the whole company a great deal of diversion: and after all, the father declared, that since his daughter had already gone to bed to his kinsman, it should be his fault if he did not next go to bed to his daughter, he being willing to bestow her upon him, and give her a good portion. This generous offer was so advantageous to the young gentleman, that he could by no means refuse it; and his late bed-fellow hearing what her father had said, was easily prevailed upon to accept of him for her husband.

The PARSON CHEATED by HIMSELF.

MR. Charles Whyte, one of Oliver Cromwell's domestic chaplains, a sprightly man, and of the chief wits of the court, was so ambitious as to make his addresses to Oliver's youngest daughter, the lady Frances. The young lady did not discourage him, but, in so religious a court, this gallantry could not be carried on, without being taken notice of. The protector was told of it, and was much concerned thereat; he ordered the person who told him to keep a strict look out, promising, if he could give him any substantial proofs, he should be well rewarded, and Whyte severely punished. The spy followed his business so close, that in a little time he dogged Charly Whyte, as he was generally called, to the lady's chamber, and ran immediately to the protector to acquaint him that they were together. Oliver in a rage hastened the chamber, and going in hastily, found Charly on his knees, either kissing the lady's hand, or having just kissed it. Cromwell in a fury asked what was the meaning of that posture before his daughter Frank? Whyte, with a great deal of presence of mind, said, "May it please your highness, I have a long time courted that young gentlewoman there, my lady's woman, and cannot prevail: I was therefore humbly praying her ladyship to intercede for me." The protector turning to the young woman, cried, "What's the meaning of all this, hussy? Why do you refuse the honour Mr Whyte would do you? he is my friend, and I expect you should treat him as such." The lady's woman, who desired nothing more, with a very low curtesey, repld, "If Mr Whyte intends me that honour, I shall not be against him." "Sayest thou so, my lass? cried Cromwell; call Godwyn this bulinel's shall be done presently, before I go out of the room." Mr Whyte was gone too far to go back; the brother parson came; Charly and my lady's woman were married in the presence of the protector, who gave her five hundred pounds for her portion, which, with the money she had before, made Mr. Whyte easy in his circumstances, except that he never loved his wife, nor she him, though they lived together near fifty years afterwards.

MAGNANIMITY of SCIPIO, the Roman general.

Scipio had taken the city of New Carthage in Spain, where besides the rest of the spoil, there were found a number of boys and girls, the children of the nobility; among the rest a virgin was brought and presented to Scipio, whose marvellous beauty attracted the eyes of all men; it was supposed this would be no unacceptable present to a young general. But as soon as he had looked upon her, he said, "I would accept and enjoy this virgin, were I a private person, and not in such command as now I am: as it is, the republic keeps this mind of mine sufficiently employed; yet I receive her as a kind of pledge to be by me restored and returned where reason and humanity shall direct." He then asked the young lady of what country she was, what her birth, and who her parents? By her he understood that she was a princess, and contracted to Luceius, a young prince of her nation. The general therefore sent both for him and her parents; and when come, setting the lady by him, spoke thus to her spouse. "As soon as this virgin was by my soldiers brought and presented to me, I with pleasure beheld the excellency of her form, and I praised the other accomplishments of her body and mind, for nature hath not brought us forth blind and altogether indifferent of such things; love can reach even the breast of mine, but then it must be an honest one, and such as the time and my affairs will permit: though therefore she mine by the right of war, I am not desirous, in the midst of arms, to play away my time in amorous dalliances; nor perhaps would it be just to detain from a valiant person one that is already contracted to him. I have learnt thus much from her: and have therefore sent for thee, that I might see thee, and that I, (heaven is my witness,) might deliver this virgin chaste as I found her to thee. She hath lived with me in the same caution and reservedness, as if she had been with her own parents, nor was it a gift either worthy of myself or thee, if either force or private fraud had made any diminution to her virtue. Receive her inviolate, and enjoy her:

nor do I desire any other recompence, than a cordial respect to Scipio and the Romans." The young prince was astonished at joy; the parents fell down at the feet of Scipio, and laying there a considerable weight of gold, offered it as her ransom: but he bid the young prince take it, as a part of her dowry from himself, above that which her parents should give. Thus did he at once overcome lust and covetousness; and by this one noble act of his, drew a great part of Spain to the side of the Romans; they striving with eagerness to be subject to a person of so much virtue.

Remarkable Instance of PENETRATION and ADVICE.
A Chinese Story.

THERE was a intendant of a province in that empire, who, out of regard to a particular friend of his, made him chief justice of the city where he resided. It happened that his intendant of a sudden became inaccessible: and under pretence of indisposition, would neither do business, nor be seen. The chief justice was extremely concerned at this behaviour: he came often to his house, but was denied admission; at last, however, it was granted him, and when he entered, he found the intendant in a very melancholy posture.
He therefore intreated his friend not to conceal from him the true state of his condition, and the real cause of his melancholy; awhile the intendant resisted the intreaties of his kind friend, but at last he told him he had lost the imperial seal out of his cabinet, which yet remained locked, and had no marks of violence, and was thereby disabled from doing any thing, and also cut off from all hopes of receiving this necessary instrument of his office. The chief justice bade him keep up his spirits; and, instead of despairing, apply the great abilities he was known to possess, to the contriving of some means to get the seal again. The intendent sighed and said it was impossible. The chief justice asked him Whether he had any potent enemy? Yes, said the intendant the governor of this city bears strong antipathy to me, because a friend of his missed the employment I now hold. Very well, said the chief justice, then I have thought of a method to set all this matter right: do you cause the most valuable of your effects to be brought into your inner apartment and, as soon as they are safe, let the outward court of your palace be secretly set on fire; the governor, as it is his duty will be forced to come to your assistance. As soon as he appears, deliver him the cabinet; if it was he who caused it to be stolen, he will be glad to restore it; and, at all events the blame will lie at his door, not yours." The intendant instantly pursued the friends scheme; the fire drew the governor thither, as they expected; the cabinet was delivered him in a seeming fright; and the next day, when the danger was over, the intendant sending for it again, found the seal replaced; for the governor finding himself over-reached wisely compounded by this return of the seal for the fraud he had committed in procuring it to be stolen. And thus the calmness of the chief justice proved a remedy, where a man of superior parts, but without constancy of mind, threw all hopes, and abandoned himself to a wild despair.

A PRAYER in SICKNESS.

AGAIN, my father and my God!—

O let me not those names profane!

Again, the terrors of thy rod

Must I, as oft before, sustain?

I must! and wherefore can it be?

For I would learn and live thy will;

Still is my heart found false to thee?

And is my life a wand'rer still?

If yet again thy hand will spare,

I'll seek my errors out and slay:

Forgive this ardency of pray'r!

O bid deliv'rance come away!

Send mercy with her from above !
Behold I sink ! O send with speed !
Glad I'd receive the gentle dove,
But let her wings be doves' indeed !

But, if thy providential plan,
Allows my life no longer thread,
If I must live but half my span,
Chear with one smile, my dying bed !

The ANTS and the GRASSHOPPER.
THE ants, a prudent, faithful train,
Brought forth and dri'd the heaps of grain,
A grasshopper, half starv'd, went by,
Who bow'd and begg'd their charity :
To whom an hoary ant reply'd,
In harvest how's your time employ'd ?
I sing, (the insect said) and play,
To make the lab'ring peasants gay ;
Ah ! cried the ant, how just the chance—
As then you sung, you now may dance ;
In vain you here for food apply,
I'll feed no idle folks, not I.

M O R N I N G.

ARISE my soul, survey the morn,
And purple beauties of the dawn,
In order as they shine ;
The herbs that with the dew-drops glow,
The grass, the shrubs, the flow'rets show,
Their Maker all divine !

Hark ! how the warbling feather'd throng
Now tune their soft melodious song,
From every leafy spray ;
The black bird here with mellow throat,
And there the thrush with softer note,
In concert pour the lay.

Do thou my soul responsive join,
Ambitious of a theme divine,
And sing thy Maker's praise :
Unnumber'd objects he supplies,
For contemplation's wondering eyes,
And all the muses lay.

EVENING. AN ODE.

ONCE more, my muse, repeat the strain,
And welcome silent eve again,
Amidst the deep'ning shades:
She comes, mild harbinger of night,
The skies now blush with parting light,
And dew drops deck the glades.

The sun, in whose meridian blaze,
The verdure of the field decays,
And flow'rets drop their heads,
Now shines with mild and lambent beams,
And fainter yet and fainter gleams,
Obliquely o'er the meads.

The lab'ring steers, whose painful toil,
All day subdues the stony soil,
With joy resign the yoke:
With loosen'd traces they retreat,
No longer now they pant with heat,
Their sides no longer smoke.

The shepherd now, his number told,
With pleasure bends his bleating fold,
And seeks his humble cot,
Where free from care, and grief, and pain,
Soft ease and peace, and rest remain,
The shepherd's happy lot.

The winds no longer shake the grove,
The slender aspens scarcely move,
Their ever flutt'ring leaf:
The birds no longer tune their throats,
Except sweet Philomel, whose notes
Proclaim all night her grief.

Together, Cælia, let us walk,
And pass the time in pleasing talk,
Or view this charming scene:
And may the hours that here are lent,
The day of life, but thus be spent,
Its evening thus serene!
